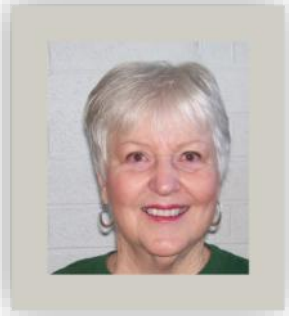
President-Ginny Buckalew



Dear Members and Friends of LBRW,

I hope you are enjoying our wonderful spring weather as much as I am. Lots of things beyond the weather are heating up with our mid-term elections right around the corner. We continue to bring as many Republican Candidates as possible to speak at our meetings. Our goal is to educate ourselves so that we can share this information with others. The Democrats are spending huge amounts of money this year in Arizona. They want to flip the control of the Legislature and turn us into a solidly blue state. We cannot let that happen and it will take each of us doing our part to stop them. Not only must we get out and vote, but we must make sure our family and friends do the same. Don't allow those low-propensity voters to stop us from taking back the top political positions in Arizona. As we have been reminded—less than 40% of Registered voters turned out for the previous mid-term election. That cannot happen in 2026! Talk to your friends and encourage everyone to vote. Also, remind everyone that our city government offices will most likely be decided in the Primary.

I hope you will plan to be at all of our monthly meetings for some fellowship, fun, and plenty of information on upcoming events in our community and state. I am always available to you for questions or input. I hope to see you in May and remember—invite your friends to join us too!
Your President
Ginny Buckalew

Since we've just celebrated Easter, I find myself in a philosophical mood. We may disagree on politics, religion, or lifestyle, but Jesus died for their sins as much as he died for mine. It is both humbling and awe-inspiring. So, whether we celebrate or commiserate with each other, let's remember the source of it all.

Please contact me with any requests.

Remember to donate to the Meals on Wheels program by putting your donation into the red bags on the dinner tables.

Spotlight member – Linda Heredero

My name is Linda Heredero and I was born in the Netherlands.

Before they were married, my father was a prisoner of war in Japan for three and a half years during WWII. After the war ended, he married my mom and they settled in Indonesia for several years. My father was a career Navy man. He was moved around quite a bit, causing my three eldest brothers to be born in Indonesia. He was eventually moved to the Netherlands where I and the rest of my siblings were born. My mother was a bookkeeper for a large company in the Netherlands during that period.

In 1972, at the end of his naval career, my father retired and having my mom's side of the family already living there, we packed up and immigrated to California. This is where I met and married my husband.
We had three children, two daughters and one son. My husband worked for the US Postal Service and I worked for a Certified Public Accountant in Woodland Hills. In 2001, my husband received the transfer he requested with a supervisor position. We moved to Lake Havasu in August of 2001. He then started his new position at the Havasu Post Office.

I eventually got my degree and started teaching preschool and kindergarten. I loved working with children and watching them develop. My own children were in high school and college by this time.

In February 2009, our son was diagnosed with osteosarcoma, and I became his full-time caregiver, taking him to UCLA Santa Monica for treatment. He battled the disease for over a year, succumbing to the disease on June 11, 2010 at the age of 22.
It was an extremely difficult time to get through. Our oldest daughter had gotten married in 2009 and blessed us with our first grandson in June of 2013, which helped heal our hearts tremendously. Our grandson's personality is very much like his uncle's, which is extremely endearing. They have since blessed us with another grandson in 2017.

Coming from a hardworking immigrant family who went through the proper avenues to come to this country, I have zero tolerance for illegals and how the border was wide open to them. When I arrived in California, I did not speak a word of English but learned. As soon as I was able, I became a naturalized citizen and used that opportunity to vote Conservative. My whole family is Conservative.

Now that we are both retired, we enjoy traveling with our children and grandchildren. Our vacations are always spent together. We love our blessed life.

Council Corner by David Diaz, Vice Mayor

The following is a brief recap of current events/situations involving your City Council.

We-Go-Round. Our new We-Go-Round playground equipment and updated play surface has been installed at Rotary Park in the Accessible Playground area. The We-Go-Round is an inclusive piece of equipment that allows kids of all abilities, including those who use wheelchairs, to play together safely. Along with that, the new play surface will provide a safer and more accessible area for everyone to enjoy.

Development and Permit Fees Comparison. Mohave County Development Services completed a building permit fee comparison earlier this year, which includes several jurisdictions and counties in the region. Lake Havasu City is at the middle or lower end of most of the fees included in this survey.

Parks and Recreation Director. The city's Park's & Recreation Director has tendered her resignation. Her last day is on May 1st. A decision on naming the interim director will take place in the next few weeks, prior to her last day.

Arizona State Land Department. We are talking to ASLD about the preservation of shoreline for property they own. The ideal situation is to acquire an easement or other mechanism that preserves the shoreline prior to an auction being held. The specifics are quite complicated, but there may be a path forward. Staff is working with ASLD staff to determine possible next steps for the Council to consider.

Second Bridge. Arizona State Parks Department is now telling us they need more time to formally convey their property to the City, which is needed for the construction of the second bridge. The most recent communication gives us six to eight months until the process is completed. This is problematic because it is pushing our start date into the first quarter of 2027, instead of October of this year, as originally hoped. We will be ready, but we are subjected to the whims of three outside agencies, including State Parks, State Land and the Coast Guard.

Police Officer Recruitment. Our Police Department received a good number of qualified applications for our vacant police officer positions. We currently have 11 individuals in background and another six applicants who qualified for the oral boards. These numbers typically dwindle very quickly as they go through the process, but we are hopeful that we can bring on a few qualified individuals to serve our community.

Circle K and Clean Freak Carwash. We received an application for a rezone for the construction of a Circle K gas station and a Clean Freak carwash. The property is located at the corner of Riviera Dr. and Mesquite Ave., in the Commercial Health District. The application is scheduled to be heard by P& Z on 4/15 and by the City Council on 5/26.

Annexation. The Mohave County Board of Supervisors is hearing our annexation request for the property where the old Sheriff's substation is located on May 18th. Staff will be at the board meeting to answer any questions the County may have.

Havasu Riviera. The representatives of Havasu Riviera submitted an application for infrastructure permits for their next sub-division, which they are calling "67". This is the second to last phase of the development and it contains 83 lots.

General Plan Update. Comments are being accepted for the draft General Plan. There are a few key dates to keep in mind as the process progresses. Adoption timeframes:

- The first introduction to the Planning and Zoning Commission is on May 6th at LHUSD board room. (Informational)
- The second introduction to the Planning and Zoning commission is on May 20th City at the City Council Chambers (Recommendation)

The City Council will consider adoption of the General Plan on June 9th

The LHC City Council is always here to serve the needs of our community. Please feel free to reach out at anytime for information or clarification on any issues/concerns.

Regards,
David V. Diaz

Swalwell, Gallego, Gonzales, and Madison Cawthorn's 'I told you so' moment.

The GOP treated Cawthorn brutally when he spoke out about D.C. debauchery. He's owed an apology—and the taxpayers are owed the truth. Andrea Widburg | April 17, 2026 t's a truism that when you have men and power, you will always have sex. In cultures where men proudly flaunted their power-acquired sexual conquests, while it was tawdry, it wasn't a national security problem. (Unless, of course, sex clouded their judgment, as with David, Ahab, and our own Benedict Arnold.) However, when powerful figures are hiding their sexual conquests, the way is open for in-house or, worse, external blackmail.

Four years ago, then-Rep. Madison Cawthorn (R-NC) warned us about what was going on in Congress, only to have his own party brutally shut him down. Now, with the revelations about Eric Swalwell and Tony Gonzales and the accusations against Reuben Gallegos, Cawthorn is enjoying a victory lap:

It was in March 2022, during an appearance on the Warrior Poet Society podcast, that Cawthorn, after the host mentioned Kevin Spacey's House of Cards, a show about power and sex in Congress, announced that the show was pretty accurate:

Here's the key language about the sexual and drug shenanigans:

The sexual perversion that goes on in Washington -- I mean, being a young guy in Washington where the average age [in Congress] is probably 60 or 70. And I look at all these people who I looked up to my entire life, I always payed attention to politics. Guys that, you know, then all of a sudden you get invited to, 'Hey we're going to have kind of a sexual get together at one of our homes. You should come.' What did you just ask me to come to? And then you realize they're asking you to come to an orgy.

Or the fact that, you know, there's some of the people that are leading on the movement to try and remove, you know, addiction in our country, and then you watch them do, you know, a key bump of cocaine right in front of you, and it's like, wow, this is this is wild.

Once Cawthorn spoke those words, the GOP (not the Dems, but the GOP) set out to destroy him. He instantly became persona non grata, making it impossible for him to win reelection. (He might not have won regardless, but the GOP response, as I said, made it impossible.) It's becoming pretty clear that they attacked him, not because he was lying, but because he was telling the truth.

Democrats, of course, were no happier about having the secret come out. We know that because 357 congresscritters recently voted not to release information about the members of Congress who benefited from the vast taxpayer slush fund to settle sexual claims against them. Club Congress may not have secret society rituals with medieval robes, candles, and chants, but it knows how to keep its secrets.

When Cawthorn became persona non grata, some said that his accusations against D.C politicians were just about Cawthorn trying to lessen the import of accusations about his own sexual conduct, but, even if that were the case, it didn't make what he said about D.C. less credible to me. That's because I lived for two decades in Marin County, one of America's wealthiest regions (although, I hasten to add, I didn't live in the wealthiest parts of that county).

When I lived in Marin, people with first-hand knowledge told me that in Marin's wealthiest towns, orgies were a status symbol, as remarried men showed off their trophy wives, while those wives who'd managed to hang on showed off the results of plastic surgery and hard work with personal trainers. Perhaps not coincidentally, at the same time I learned about this debauchery, a study revealed that Marin County had the nation's highest binge-drinking rate. In other words, Marin's men (and some of its women) were "gods of the universe," rich people who partied hard and for whom the laws of ordinary middle-class morality no longer applied.

In Marin, the men were a bit closer to the ancients of old, insofar as flaunting their sexual conquests enhanced their status, rather than risking their careers. However, in D.C., while sexual conquests may have enhanced status in D.C.'s inner circles, politicians must look decent to the voting public. That reality makes all these people vulnerable to political manipulation, whether by domestic actors (political parties policing their own or using knowledge to threaten the opposition) or, more scarily, by hostile foreign actors. If a foreign power has a video of Congressman X engaging in an orgy and snorting cocaine, that hostile power has X by the short-hairs—and America by the throat.

Speaking of policing one's own, Jonathan Turley, a very reputable source, has written that Eric Swalwell was utterly beholden to Nancy Pelosi, who made and then protected him:

The fact, however, is that (regardless of the merits of these latest allegations), Swalwell was always a notorious figure in Washington who was constructed by Pelosi and others to serve their interests.

Swalwell was infamously accused of having an affair with an alleged Chinese spy named Fang Fang. His patron in Congress, then-Speaker Nancy Pelosi, immediately moved to protect him, declaring, "I don't have any concern about Mr. Swalwell."

For years, the Democratic establishment and the media ignored any rumors surrounding Swalwell because he was their useful monster, someone who was an attack dog always straining at the leash.

Swalwell wasn't just their attack dog. Judging by the allegations coming out, it wasn't just that they found his foaming-at-the-mouth rage useful. They could direct it wherever they pleased.

It's time to pressure sitting congresspeople to 'fess up. It's time to prosecute those who sold out. It's time for Americans to start electing better people. And it's time for the GOP to bend the knee and apologize to Madison Cawthorn:

The Supreme Court's 'mean girls' are destroying the institution

Sonia Sotomayor's and Ketanji Brown Jackson's statements this past week are undercutting the Supreme Court's integrity and, therefore, its authority. Andrea Widburg | April 16, 2026

One of the long-standing rules of the Supreme Court is that it presents a united front to the world. While the judges may dissent from each other's rulings, these are supposed to be rarefied academic disagreements. However, if the justices are to retain the Supreme Court's authority, they must seem to be above petty squabbles. After all, we Americans don't get to elect them, despite the vast power they wield, so it's important that they appear to be exceptionally virtuous human beings who rise above normal human passions.

The two most leftist justices on the Court (and, unquestionably, the two least intelligent), Sonia Sotomayor and Ketanji Brown Jackson, seemingly don't care about the Court's reputation as the home of serious, objective minds, or about the power it derives from maintaining that reputation. Instead, like the airhead mean girls at high school, they think their power comes from badmouthing their classmates.

It started with Sonia Sotomayor, who basically said that, because she's a street-smart "wise Latina" (who went to Princeton and Yale), she has infinitely more wisdom than Brett Kavanaugh, who had the moral misfortune of having a comfortable suburban upbringing. According to her, he's incapable of imagining what life is like for the less fortunate. Apparently, the rule of law is less important than one's social imagination:

Justice Sonia Sotomayor criticized a fellow member of the US Supreme Court for failing to grasp the real-world effects of an unsigned order last year that allowed immigration enforcement sweeps in Los Angeles to resume.

"I had a colleague in that case who wrote, you know, these are only temporary stops," Sotomayor said, referencing a concurrence written by Justice Brett Kavanaugh, during an event Tuesday hosted by the University of Kansas School of Law. "This is from a man whose parents were professionals. And probably doesn't really know any person who works by the hour."

What a singularly nasty thing to say. It's also a stupid thing to say.

Sotomayor's point was that Kavanaugh lacks compassion for hourly workers who miss a few hours because they're caught up in immigration sweeps. But having compassion isn't the Court's job. The Court's job is to determine whether the matter before it comports with the Constitution, the statutes, and the case law of the United States. The Court is there to interpret the law, not to rule according to its "feelz."

One can only imagine the discussions inside the Court after Sotomayor announced both her debased theory about the Supreme Court's role in American policy and her contempt for her fellow justice. Whatever was said led Sotomayor to do something unusual. On Wednesday, she issued a public apology for what she said:

"At a recent appearance at the University of Kansas School of Law, I referred to a disagreement with one of my colleagues in a prior case, but I made remarks that were inappropriate," Sotomayor said in a statement issued by the court. "I regret my hurtful comments. I have apologized to my colleague."

Well, it's sort of an apology. Mostly, she seems to regret being forced to apologize.

One wonders if the mandate to apologize occurred before or after Ketanji Brown Jackson appeared on Monday at Yale Law School and went scorched earth on her conservative colleagues:

The supreme court justice Ketanji Brown Jackson has delivered a sustained attack on her conservative colleagues' use of emergency orders to benefit the Trump administration, calling the orders "scratch-paper musings" that can "seem oblivious and thus ring hollow".

She referred to orders, often issued with little or no explanation, as "back-of-the-envelope, first-blush impressions of the merits of the legal issue".

Worse still, Jackson said, was that the court insists those "scratch-paper musings" be applied by lower courts in other cases.

The orders suffer from an additional problem, she said: a failure to acknowledge that real people are involved, making them "seem oblivious and thus ring hollow".

Jackson also rejected the court's assessment that preventing the president from putting his policy in place also is a harm that often outweighs what the challengers to a policy might face.

"The president of the United States, though he may be harmed in an abstract way, he certainly isn't harmed if what he wants to do is illegal," Jackson said during a question-and-answer session with the law school dean, Cristina Rodriguez.

Ketanji, if she'd thought it out with both hands for a week, could not have done something that more effectively undermines the Court's authority. The fact that she may well be incapable of understanding how the law works, hence her dismissive attitude toward her conservative colleagues, will not weigh upon Democrats. All they will see is that a voice from inside the Court—a voice with all the authority of a black woman—has affirmed what they always suspected: The Supreme Court is a giant MAGA, capitalist, evil, colonialist, white supremacist (ignore Justice Thomas) engine of the oligarchy that must be destroyed.

When I was at law school in the mid-1980s, Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, the first female justice, came and spoke at the law school. She told us what an honor it was to be a part of this august institution, and how grateful she was to serve with men of such intelligence and integrity. That was both classy and appropriate, two adjectives that could never be applied to the Supreme Court's "mean girls."
